"Blended Value" = average of (Board A rank – pick) and (Board B rank – pick), 50/50. Positive = got players later than the blended market cost; negative = paid a premium ahead of it.

Sources: Board A — 12-team full-PPR consensus ADP composite (early September 2026). Board B — user-provided full-PPR rankings board (bde-draft-rankings-ppr-2026). Both boards blended 50/50 by rank. Grades weigh value vs. blended market cost, sleeper upside, and projected workload/target volume.

Still the class of the league. Gibbs at market to start, then Sam LaPorta, T.J. Hockenson, Cameron Dicker and Omar Cooper all check out as legitimate discounts on both source boards, not just one. Best of all, the value came with real opportunity attached — Josh Jacobs and Rico Dowdle both walk into three-down workloads, not committees.

Best Pick: T.J. Hockenson (TE) in Round 14, Pick 168 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 240 / 181, a +42-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Jared Goff (QB) in Round 12, Pick 144 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 106 / 112, a -35-spot blended reach.

Roster Construction: RB: 6, WR: 4, QB: 2, TE: 2, DEF: 1, K: 1

James Cook and Derrick Henry price out fairly and both carry every-down volume. Mark Andrews is the headline upside swing — a big discount at tight end behind Kyle Pitts, with real target competition only if he loses snaps to injury. The Patriots defense reach in Round 14 is the one real blemish.

Best Pick: Mark Andrews (TE) in Round 8, Pick 89 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 137 / 159, a +59-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Patriots DEF (DEF) in Round 14, Pick 161 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 129 / —, a -32-spot blended reach.

Jefferson and Barkley graded at cost and both come with league-winning volume attached. Isaiah Likely is the clear sleeper of the roster — real red-zone role behind an oft-injured Mark Andrews, at a Round 8 price. Rashee Rice and Quentin Johnston are the two picks that cost more than the workload argument justifies.

Best Pick: Kenny Gainwell (RB) in Round 10, Pick 109 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 95 / 230, a +54-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Patrick Mahomes (QB) in Round 11, Pick 132 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 108 / 108, a -24-spot blended reach.

Jonathan Taylor and Javonte Williams both carry legitimate lead-back volume. The upside case here is depth-chart driven — Ja'Kobi Lane and Kaleb Johnson are the kind of Round 12+ dart throws that only pay off if a role opens up ahead of them, and neither is a clear volume bet yet. Brenton Strange is the more grounded sleeper: a real receiving role in a retooled Jacksonville passing game.

Best Pick: Kaleb Johnson (RB) in Round 15, Pick 172 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 275 / 230, a +80-spot blended discount.

RJ Harvey is the headline here — a rookie stepping into a true three-down role in Denver, and the single best volume-meets-value pick on this roster. Jordan Mason, Mike Washington, and Brian Robinson add cheap depth with real standalone value if the backs ahead of them miss time. Garrett Wilson and Brock Purdy are the two picks priced ahead of their current opportunity.

Best Pick: Brian Robinson (RB) in Round 14, Pick 167 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 221 / 230, a +58-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Kyler Murray (QB) in Round 15, Pick 170 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 138 / 124, a -39-spot blended reach.

Chase at market anchors a passing-game-heavy build. The three-tight-end hedge (Loveland, Kincaid, Ferguson) is a volume bet across the board — Dalton Kincaid especially profiles as a target hog in a pass-funnel offense when he's on the field. Joe Burrow and Jakobi Meyers are the two picks that cost more than their current role supports.

Best Pick: Ravens DEF (DEF) in Round 12, Pick 142 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 210 / —, a +68-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Jakobi Meyers (WR) in Round 11, Pick 123 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 91 / 81, a -37-spot blended reach.

Puka Nacua and Josh Allen anchor a strong passing-game core with real target and dropback volume. Travis Hunter is the boldest upside swing in the whole draft — a two-way rookie who could see real offensive snaps for cheap in Round 16. Rostering three quarterbacks (Allen, Nix, Mayfield), though, is volume spent on a position that only needs one starter.

Best Pick: Chuba Hubbard (RB) in Round 6, Pick 68 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 84 / 114, a +31-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Keenan Allen (WR) in Round 15, Pick 173 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 142 / 142, a -31-spot blended reach.

CeeDee Lamb and Omarion Hampton are fairly priced, high-volume anchors. Jordyn Tyson is the standout sleeper — a rookie stepping into real target share behind a thin New Orleans receiver room. The deep running back bench (Woody Marks, Tyler Allgeier, Keaton Mitchell) is a smart hedge for standalone value if injuries open up touches.

Best Pick: Woody Marks (RB) in Round 10, Pick 111 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 152 / 162, a +46-spot blended discount.

Amon-Ra St. Brown and A.J. Brown anchor a target-heavy receiver room. Oronde Gadsden is the clear sleeper of the draft — real receiving volume in the Chargers' passing game, taken outside the top 130. The Broncos defense and Alec Pierce, on the other hand, were bought well ahead of their actual role.

Best Pick: Oronde Gadsden (TE) in Round 12, Pick 136 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 275 / 195, a +99-spot blended discount.

De'Von Achane and Chase Brown carry legitimate lead-back volume, and Tucker Kraft is a strong sleeper — an ascending target earner at tight end taken outside the top 100. But the pattern of paying ahead of role — Dak Prescott, Wan'Dale Robinson, Tony Pollard, the Seahawks defense — is the story of this draft.

Best Pick: Jalen Nailor (WR) in Round 13, Pick 155 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 181 / 174, a +22-spot blended discount.

A receiver-heavy build (seven total) with real target volume at the top in Jaxon Smith-Njigba, but several of the picks in Rounds 4–11 (DJ Moore, Michael Pittman, Matthew Golden, KC Concepcion) were bought ahead of a clear path to volume. Chig Okonkwo is the sleeper that stands out — real receiving-game role at tight end for a Round 14 price.

Best Pick: Chig Okonkwo (TE) in Round 14, Pick 162 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 248 / 160, a +42-spot blended discount.

Christian McCaffrey and Brock Bowers open with legitimate every-down volume, but the string of reaches that follows — Drake London, Davante Adams, Drake Maye, Courtland Sutton — was bought well ahead of the workload case for each. Jaxson Dart is the sleeper worth watching: real starting/volume upside if he keeps the Giants' offense in his hands.

Best Pick: Chiefs DEF (DEF) in Round 16, Pick 187 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 254 / —, a +67-spot blended discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Courtland Sutton (WR) in Round 8, Pick 91 overall — Board A/B had him around pick 60 / 87, a -18-spot blended reach.

Roster Construction: RB: 5, WR: 5, TE: 2, QB: 2, K: 1, DEF: 1
