"Value" = average of (board rank – pick number) across every source that actually ranks that player, evenly weighted — 10% per source. Positive = got players later than the market's blended view; negative = paid a premium ahead of it.

Suspension & Availability Watch

Checked against news current as of Sept. 6, 2026 — worth rechecking before Week 1 locks.

Team	Player	Pos	Status
Jer13	Josh Jacobs	RB	Placed on the NFL Commissioner's Exempt List on Aug. 31, 2026 amid pending misdemeanor battery and property-damage charges. Unavailable to practice or play with no clear return timeline; next court date is Nov. 17. This turns a pick that graded as fair value into the single biggest availability risk in the league.
00sef	Puka Nacua	WR	Remains under active NFL Personal Conduct Policy review tied to a civil lawsuit from an offseason incident. Not placed on the exempt list — he's returned to practice and is expected to play Week 1 — but the review is unresolved and discipline could still land during the season.
Caullyn	Kaleb Johnson	RB	Traded from Pittsburgh to Green Bay on Aug. 30 as direct depth-chart insurance for the Josh Jacobs situation above. Not a suspension himself, but his outlook is a direct consequence of one — he now profiles for real early-down opportunity behind a thin Packers backfield.

Sources (10, blended evenly at 10% each): Sleeper, ESPN, Yahoo!, CBS Sports, Fantrax, FFPC, BB10s, NFFC, Underdog — all 9 pulled from a single tracker last updated 9/6, same-day — plus a user-provided full-PPR rankings board (bdge-draft-rankings-ppr-2026), whose update time could not be independently verified. All full-PPR. Not every source drafts kickers or defenses (several best-ball formats skip both), so those picks are valued only against the sources that actually cover them. Grades weigh value vs. blended market cost, sleeper upside, and projected workload/target volume.

Still the clear top team once all ten boards are folded in evenly. Matthew Stafford graded as the single best-value pick in the league relative to how the wider market sees him, and Rico Dowdle carries real three-down volume. The one thing this report cannot grade around: Josh Jacobs was placed on the NFL's Commissioner's Exempt List on Aug. 31 amid pending misdemeanor charges and is unavailable to play or practice indefinitely, with no clear return timeline (next court date is Nov. 17). A pick that graded as fair value on draft night is now a real bust risk. Jonah Coleman in Round 15 is a separate, unrelated reach — he's buried on Denver's depth chart behind RJ Harvey.

Best Pick: Matthew Stafford (QB) in Round 4, Pick 48 overall — a +47-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Jonah Coleman (RB) in Round 15, Pick 169 overall — a -38-spot reach versus the 10-source blended market.

Roster Construction: RB: 6, WR: 4, QB: 2, TE: 2, DEF: 1, K: 1

The most consistent team across all ten sources — not the single biggest score, but the fewest big misses. Zachariah Branch stands out as a real upside sleeper (limited target competition once healthy), and Mark Andrews remains a strong workload bet behind an oft-injured Kyle Pitts. Chris Rodriguez is the one pick the market doesn't see much of a role for yet.

Best Pick: Zachariah Branch (WR) in Round 12, Pick 137 overall — a +58-spot discount versus the 8-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Chris Rodriguez (RB) in Round 13, Pick 152 overall — a -29-spot reach versus the 10-source blended market.

Jefferson and Barkley anchor legitimate volume at the top. Isaiah Likely is the clearest sleeper on the roster — real receiving-game role if Mark Andrews misses time, and the ten-board view likes him even more than the two-board view did. The Jaguars defense in Round 16 is the one pick that reads as a reach across the boards that actually cover it.

Best Pick: Isaiah Likely (TE) in Round 8, Pick 85 overall — a +16-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Jaguars DEF (DEF) in Round 16, Pick 181 overall — a -36-spot reach versus the 7-source blended market.

Chuba Hubbard is the headline value — a committee-adjacent back with real standalone role if Rico Dowdle's snaps shift, priced well behind his workload. Puka Nacua remains under active NFL Personal Conduct Policy review tied to a civil lawsuit; he was not placed on the exempt list, has returned to practice, and is on track to play Week 1, but the situation is unresolved and worth monitoring through the season. Baker Mayfield, and three total quarterbacks, is volume spent on a position this format doesn't need doubled up.

Best Pick: Chuba Hubbard (RB) in Round 6, Pick 68 overall — a +22-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Baker Mayfield (QB) in Round 14, Pick 164 overall — a -39-spot reach versus the 10-source blended market.

Oronde Gadsden is a real find here — legitimate receiving volume in the Chargers' passing game, and the ten-board view confirms it wasn't just one source being generous. Tank Bigsby is the pick that doesn't have a clear path to touches behind the players ahead of him on Philadelphia's depth chart.

Best Pick: Oronde Gadsden (TE) in Round 12, Pick 136 overall — a +24-spot discount versus the 9-source blended market.

Woody Marks stands out as a genuine value-meets-role pick in the Houston backfield. CeeDee Lamb and Omarion Hampton anchor real volume at the top. Keaton Mitchell, by contrast, doesn't have a clear path to touches behind the backs ahead of him in the Chargers' room.

Best Pick: Woody Marks (RB) in Round 10, Pick 111 overall — a +16-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Travis Etienne is a fair-value lead-back pick with real workload attached. This is otherwise a receiver-heavy build (seven total) where several Round 4–11 picks — DJ Moore, Michael Pittman, KC Concepcion — were bought a bit ahead of their current role, per the broader market.

Best Pick: Travis Etienne (RB) in Round 3, Pick 31 overall — a +6-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: KC Concepcion (WR) in Round 11, Pick 127 overall — a -22-spot reach versus the 10-source blended market.

RJ Harvey is the headline — real three-down volume in Denver's backfield, and one of the clearer value-meets-opportunity picks in the entire draft. Kyler Murray, on the other hand, was bought well ahead of where the ten-board consensus has him — among the bigger reaches in the league by this measure.

Best Pick: RJ Harvey (RB) in Round 6, Pick 71 overall — a +17-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Dalton Kincaid is a fair, workload-relevant target-earner in a pass funnel offense. Jordan Love was the pick that cost the most relative to consensus — bought well ahead of the wider market's view of his current role and competition at the position.

Best Pick: Dalton Kincaid (TE) in Round 8, Pick 94 overall — a +4-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Fernando Mendoza is a low-cost swing with no real downside this late. Dallas Goedert, taken in Round 12, is the pick that doesn't line up with the broader market — a committee-adjacent receiving role behind clearer options on his own roster, per most of the ten boards.

Best Pick: Fernando Mendoza (QB) in Round 16, Pick 182 overall — a +4-spot discount versus the 9-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Dallas Goedert (TE) in Round 12, Pick 134 overall — a -34-spot reach versus the 10-source blended market.

Kaleb Johnson is the standout on this roster, and the case just got materially stronger: Green Bay traded for him from Pittsburgh on Aug. 30 as direct insurance after Josh Jacobs landed on the Commissioner's Exempt List, and he now profiles for real early-down work behind a thin Packers backfield (MarShawn Lloyd, Chris Brooks) — outside the top 200 on every board that ranks him, pure lottery-ticket value that's already paying off before Week 1. Cyrus Allen, on the other hand, doesn't have a clear path to targets on his current depth chart.

Best Pick: Kaleb Johnson (RB) in Round 15, Pick 172 overall — a +16-spot discount versus the 7-source blended market.

Jauan Jennings is a fair, role-relevant value pick. But this roster has the weakest early-round grade in the league by this measure — Drake Maye was bought well ahead of consensus, and that early cost is the story of the draft here.

Best Pick: Jauan Jennings (WR) in Round 14, Pick 163 overall — a +6-spot discount versus the 10-source blended market.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Drake Maye (QB) in Round 7, Pick 78 overall — a -22-spot reach versus the 10-source blended market.
