2026 Draft Grades

12 teams · 16 rounds · Full PPR · Snake draft

Methodology

Every pick was compared against a current consensus Average Draft Position (ADP) benchmark for 12-team full-PPR leagues as of the first week of September 2026, built from the mix of major fantasy platforms this league draws from — FantasyPros' consensus (itself blended from ESPN, CBS Sports, RTSports, Fantrax and Sleeper), NFL.com, and Yahoo. A pick's value is simply its ADP rank minus the actual pick number it was taken at: positive means the team got the player later (cheaper) than the market would have, negative means they paid a premium ahead of consensus. Grades weigh three things: (1) value relative to ADP, especially in the first eight rounds where roster cores are set; (2) roster construction — positional balance, bye-week stacking, and depth at the right spots; and (3) risk/upside — rookie workload uncertainty, injury history, and target-share competition on the players actually drafted. This is a point-in-time snapshot of a specific draft night, not a forecast — rookie ADPs in particular can still move as roles clarify in the preseason.

"Value" = consensus ADP rank minus actual pick number, averaged across the team's picks. Positive = got players later than market cost; negative = paid a premium ahead of market.

Started right at market with Gibbs, then hit on almost every swing after that. Sam LaPorta, T.J. Hockenson, Cameron Dicker and Omar Cooper all came in well below their consensus cost, giving this roster one of the deepest, cheapest benches in the league. The only soft spot is a run on quarterbacks (Stafford, Goff) and running backs (Rico Dowdle, Aaron Jones) in the middle rounds that landed a round or two ahead of consensus.

Best Pick: T.J. Hockenson (TE) in Round 14, Pick 168 overall — ADP had him going around pick 240, a 72-spot discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Jared Goff (QB) in Round 12, Pick 144 overall — ADP had him going around pick 106, 38 spots later than where he was actually taken.

Roster Construction: RB: 6, WR: 4, QB: 2, TE: 2, DEF: 1, K: 1

A textbook value draft. James Cook and Derrick Henry both came at fair cost, then Mark Andrews fell nearly five full rounds below his ADP as the TE2 behind Kyle Pitts — an excellent hedge at a shallow position. Michael Penix and Chris Rodriguez as pure lottery tickets in the final rounds cost nothing and could pay off. The lone real miss was reaching for a defense (Patriots) two rounds early.

Best Pick: Michael Penix (QB) in Round 16, Pick 185 overall — ADP had him going around pick 275, a 90-spot discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Patriots DEF (DEF) in Round 14, Pick 161 overall — ADP had him going around pick 129, 32 spots later than where he was actually taken.

The best late-round hit rate in the league. Jonathan Taylor and Javonte Williams anchor the RB room at fair value, and from Round 11 on this team barely missed — Brenton Strange, Ja’Kobi Lane, and Kaleb Johnson all came at a massive discount to their market cost. The trade-off is a WR-heavy build (seven total) that leaves the position group deep but unspectacular after the first two picks.

Best Pick: Kaleb Johnson (RB) in Round 15, Pick 172 overall — ADP had him going around pick 275, a 103-spot discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Rashid Shaheed (WR) in Round 13, Pick 148 overall — ADP had him going around pick 130, 18 spots later than where he was actually taken.

Justin Jefferson and Saquon Barkley locked in exactly at cost to start, and David Montgomery in Round 3 was a nice value add. From there the board got choppy — Rashee Rice, Quentin Johnston, Kenny Gainwell and Patrick Mahomes were all taken a round or more ahead of their market price. Isaiah Likely and Justin Herbert were the two picks that clawed real value back.

Best Pick: Isaiah Likely (TE) in Round 8, Pick 85 overall — ADP had him going around pick 144, a 59-spot discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Patrick Mahomes (QB) in Round 11, Pick 132 overall — ADP had him going around pick 108, 24 spots later than where he was actually taken.

Ja'Marr Chase at market to start a roster that leaned into a three-tight-end hedge — Colston Loveland, Dalton Kincaid, and Jake Ferguson — and it paid off, with Kincaid landing nearly five rounds below cost. The Ravens defense in Round 12 was pure profit. Joe Burrow and Jakobi Meyers were the two picks that came in ahead of the market.

Best Pick: Ravens DEF (DEF) in Round 12, Pick 142 overall — ADP had him going around pick 210, a 68-spot discount.

CeeDee Lamb and Omarion Hampton gave this roster a strong, fairly-priced foundation, and the running back room got remarkably deep late — Woody Marks, Tyler Allgeier, and Keaton Mitchell were all taken well after where the market had them. Jordyn Tyson in Round 11 was the single best value pick on the roster. Zay Flowers and Jayden Daniels were the two picks that jumped the market.

Best Pick: Jordyn Tyson (WR) in Round 11, Pick 130 overall — ADP had him going around pick 190, a 60-spot discount.

About as close to a pure consensus draft as this league produced — almost every pick through Round 8 landed within a couple of spots of ADP, which is a safe floor but leaves little extra margin. The payoff came late: Chig Okonkwo in Round 14 was one of the bigger tight end discounts in the whole draft, and Eddy Pineiro added a bit more free value at kicker.

Best Pick: Chig Okonkwo (TE) in Round 14, Pick 162 overall — ADP had him going around pick 248, a 86-spot discount.

Worst Pick / Biggest Reach: Michael Pittman (WR) in Round 8, Pick 90 overall — ADP had him going around pick 78, 12 spots later than where he was actually taken.

Bijan Robinson at exact market value, then a string of useful running back value late — Brian Robinson, Mike Washington, and Evan McPherson all well below cost. The cost was reaching on Garrett Wilson and Brian Thomas in the receiver room, and taking Brock Purdy and a defense (Vikings) a round or two before the market would have.

Best Pick: Brian Robinson (RB) in Round 14, Pick 167 overall — ADP had him going around pick 221, a 54-spot discount.

Amon-Ra St. Brown and A.J. Brown anchor a receiver-heavy build at fair prices, and Oronde Gadsden in Round 12 was arguably the single biggest bargain of the entire draft relative to his market cost. That value is partly offset by two real reaches — the Broncos defense and Alec Pierce — taken well before the market caught up.

Best Pick: Oronde Gadsden (TE) in Round 12, Pick 136 overall — ADP had him going around pick 275, a 139-spot discount.

Puka Nacua and Josh Allen give this roster a strong passing-game core, but the middle rounds were rough: Rhamondre Stevenson, Baker Mayfield, and Keenan Allen were each taken well ahead of their market cost, and rostering three quarterbacks (Allen, Nix, Mayfield) is a resource allocation that rarely pays off in a single-QB format. Travis Hunter as a Round 16 flier was a nice late save.

Best Pick: Travis Hunter (WR/DB) in Round 16, Pick 188 overall — ADP had him going around pick 237, a 49-spot discount.

De'Von Achane and Chase Brown were both fairly priced to open, and Tucker Kraft in Round 6 was a real find at tight end. From there, though, this was the most consistently over-market draft in the league — Dak Prescott, Wan'Dale Robinson, Tony Pollard, Jameson Williams and the Seahawks defense were all taken a round or more before consensus had them going.

Best Pick: Tucker Kraft (TE) in Round 6, Pick 62 overall — ADP had him going around pick 104, a 42-spot discount.

Christian McCaffrey at exact market value and Brock Bowers as a nice Round 2 discount opened things well, but four separate reaches in the first eight rounds — Drake London, Davante Adams, Drake Maye, and Courtland Sutton — put this roster in an early hole that Hunter Henry and a Round 16 Chiefs defense could only partly repair.

Best Pick: Chiefs DEF (DEF) in Round 16, Pick 187 overall — ADP had him going around pick 254, a 67-spot discount.
