

One Bite Fantasy League

Waiver Wire Recap — Week 2

4 FAAB claims processed · Full PPR

Four claims went through this week, split evenly between speculative Week 1 breakouts and lateral roster-fit moves. Two of the four (Vele and Douglas) were players who had real fantasy production Sunday; the other two were more about matchup fit and bench churn.

Whodatjuan

ADD Devaughn Vele (WR — NO) → DROP Chig Okonkwo (TE — WAS) — $15

Won over Raymond49 ($5) and Callyn ($1)

FANTASY IMPACT

The best pure Week 1 production of anyone added this cycle: 7 catches, 69 yards, and a touchdown on 9 targets (19.9 PPR points) as New Orleans' clear WR2 behind Chris Olave. He ran a team-high 82 snaps. The real driver of his opportunity: rookie Jordyn Tyson's hamstring injury is expected to keep him out a month or more — the exact situation this league's Risk Watch flagged on mattware1199's roster. Vele inherits real target volume for as long as that lasts.

ROSTER CONTEXT

Whodatjuan already has one of the deepest receiver rooms in the league (Smith-Njigba, Moore, Pittman, Downs, Golden, Concepcion, Boston) — this is pure best-athlete-available bench-building, not filling a need. The drop is notable: Chig Okonkwo graded as a real sleeper find in the preseason draft report for his receiving role in Tennessee; he's now been squeezed off the roster entirely.

mattware1199

ADD Caleb Douglas (WR — MIA) → DROP Tyler Allgeier (RB — ARI) — $10

Won over a $12 bid from Whodatjuan, which was rejected — Whodatjuan's roster would have exceeded the league's roster limit after the move.

FANTASY IMPACT

A rookie breakout that's hard to ignore: 5 catches for 94 yards on 7 targets in his NFL debut (14.4 PPR points), the 12th-most receiving yards in a rookie debut since 1998. He played 35 of Miami's 40 passing plays, trailing only Malik Washington in snaps — this looks like a real role, not a one-week fluke. The catch: Miami's offense projects poorly overall, and he draws a tough Week 2 matchup against the 49ers.

ROSTER CONTEXT

mattware1199 already has WR depth to spare (Lamb, Flowers, Odunze, Tate, plus Malik Nabers via trade), so this reads as a pure upside stash. Dropping Tyler Allgeier costs little — the RB room still runs through Breece Hall, MarShawn Lloyd, Woody Marks, and Keaton Mitchell.

NathanR918

ADD Devin Singletary (RB — NYG) → DROP Tyrone Tracy (RB — NYG) — $7

Only bid submitted

FANTASY IMPACT

A lateral move within the same backfield. Cam Skattebo is the Giants' clear early-down RB1, but Singletary quietly out-produced the headlines in Week 1 — 4 catches and a receiving touchdown gave him real standalone PPR value. With genuine questions about Skattebo's receiving work and durability, the backup role behind him is described as wide open, and Singletary looks like the better bet to claim it over the outgoing Tracy.

ROSTER CONTEXT

NathanR918's RB room was already deep (Jeremiyah Love, Quinshon Judkins, J.K. Dobbins, Rachaad White) after the roughest Week 1 in the league — this isn't a need-based move so much as trading one lottery ticket for a better one at the same position.

mattware1199

ADD Buccaneers (DEF — TB) → DROP Chargers (DEF — LAC) — $2

Only bid submitted

FANTASY IMPACT

A streaming-style defense swap, not a name worth researching — typical end-of-FAAB-budget matchup churn at a position where nobody in this league is investing real money.

ROSTER CONTEXT

mattware1199's second move of the cycle; between this and the Douglas add, the FAAB budget spend this week (12 total) was modest relative to Whodatjuan's single $15 bid.

Source: Sleeper app league chat, waiver claim processing screens (captured Sept. 15, 2026). Player performance and role notes from Yahoo Sports, SI/OnSI, PlayerProfiler, Roto Street Journal, and Fantasy Alarm Week 2 waiver wire coverage. Cross-referenced against league draft records and the existing Risk Watch (Jordyn Tyson).