

One Bite Fantasy League

Waiver Wire Recap — Week 3

7 FAAB claims processed · Full PPR

A busy cycle led by the league's two winless-or-worst teams. Zaniac18 (coming off the league's worst Week 2) spent the two biggest bids of the week reshaping its bench, and hogsett7 (0-2) made a real bet on red-zone upside at tight end. The rest of the board was matchup-driven streaming — and this week, the bidding itself is half the story: several teams threw real money at completely uncontested claims.

The Overpay Board

Sleeper only shows a bid count when more than one team bid — no count means the winning team was the only bidder. That's the tell: five of seven claims went uncontested, which means whatever those teams bid above $1 was pure overpay. Only two claims actually needed real money.

Team	Player	Paid	Competing Bids	Verdict
Zaniac18	Jonah Coleman	$20	None	Way overpaid — $19 spent on air
Zaniac18	A. Mitchell	$15	None	Overpaid — $14 spent on air
hogsett7	Rashod Bateman	$10	None	Overpaid — $9 spent on air
hogsett7	Darren Waller	$10	2 bids	Earned it — real competition
mattware1199	Chiefs DEF	$2	None	Trivial overpay, low stakes
satiro	Dalton Schultz	$1	2 bids	Best value of the week — won a contested claim at the floor
Jer13	Chase McLaughlin	$1	None	Can't overpay at the minimum

One caveat worth being fair about: Sleeper's FAAB claims are blind — you can't see what anyone else is bidding before it processes. Bidding big on an uncontested claim isn't necessarily a mistake in the moment, it's insurance against a bid you can't see coming. It just looks bad in hindsight when nobody else shows up.

Zaniac18

ADD Jonah Coleman (RB — DEN) → DROP Kenny Gainwell (RB — TB) — $20

Winning bid, uncontested — no other team bid, so $19 of this was pure overpay

FANTASY IMPACT

The week's biggest and most justified spend. With RJ Harvey out and J.K. Dobbins exiting early in Week 2, Coleman tied for the team lead in carries, scored a touchdown, and added receiving work — a real featured role, not just garbage-time volume. He's the consensus top waiver priority across the industry this week, and Denver's backfield picture stays murky enough that the opportunity could easily continue.

ROSTER CONTEXT

Zaniac18 was the league's Lowest Scorer and missed its own projection by 26% last week — this reads as a direct reaction, replacing a inactive committee piece (Gainwell) with a back who has a real path to touches right now. The player was worth the priority; the $20 price tag was not — nobody else bid.

Zaniac18

ADD A. Mitchell (WR — NYJ) → DROP Malik Washington (WR — MIA) — $15

Winning bid, uncontested — no other team bid, so $14 of this was pure overpay

FANTASY IMPACT

A speculative depth swap at the back of the roster — a deep-bench Jets receiver for a deep-bench Dolphins receiver. Neither profiles as a real Week 3 starter; this is roster churn, not an impact addition.

ROSTER CONTEXT

The second of two moves this week from Zaniac18, both funded by a genuinely large FAAB spend ($35 combined) — a team actively trying to shake up a roster that just posted its worst week of the season. Between this and Coleman, Zaniac18 spent $35 on two claims nobody else even bid on.

hogsett7

ADD Rashod Bateman (WR — BAL) → DROP Emmett Johnson (RB — KC) — $10

Winning bid, uncontested — no other team bid, so $9 of this was pure overpay

FANTASY IMPACT

Bateman stepped into Baltimore's WR1 role with Zay Flowers out, leading the team in targets with 7 catches on 9 targets for 88 yards and a touchdown. His fantasy ceiling is tied directly to how long Flowers is sidelined, but Baltimore's Week 3 trip to Dallas comes in a game with one of the highest projected totals on the board — good spot for a repeat performance.

ROSTER CONTEXT

A clean value-for-need swap: Emmett Johnson was buried in a crowded Chiefs backfield with no real path to touches, cashed in for a receiver with a confirmed, if conditional, starting role. Good process, but $10 for an uncontested claim leaves budget on the table.

hogsett7

ADD Darren Waller (TE — CAR) → DROP Hunter Henry (TE — NE) — $10

2 bids — genuinely competitive claim, this money was necessary

FANTASY IMPACT

A pure red-zone bet. Waller has scored in both games since coming out of retirement (two touchdowns against Atlanta in Week 2, plus a third nullified by penalty) despite modest route participation (up to 55% this week). He's touchdown-dependent by nature, but at tight end — the league's shallowest startable position — that's often enough. Next week's matchup against a banged-up Lions secondary is a good spot to see if the role keeps expanding.

ROSTER CONTEXT

This is the more debatable of hogsett7's two moves — Hunter Henry was already started and delivered a modest but real 7.00 last week. Betting on Waller's touchdown variance over Henry's floor is a real strategic choice, not a clear upgrade. At least this one was actually contested — unlike Bateman, the $10 here was money hogsett7 had to spend to win.

mattware1199

ADD Chiefs (DEF — KC) → DROP Buccaneers (DEF — TB) — $2

Winning bid, uncontested — could have bid $1 and still won

FANTASY IMPACT

Standard streaming — a defense swap for a better upcoming matchup, not a name worth deeper analysis.

ROSTER CONTEXT

mattware1199 remains winless (0-2); this kind of low-cost defense churn is typical end-of-budget housekeeping rather than a real roster move, and the extra dollar over the minimum is trivial either way.

satiro

ADD Dalton Schultz (TE — HOU) → DROP Kayshon Boutte (WR — HOU) — $1

2 bids — won a genuinely contested claim at the lowest possible price

FANTASY IMPACT

A same-team, cross-position swap — trading a Texans depth receiver for the Texans' starting tight end. Modest but sensible: Schultz has a clearer role in the Houston passing game than Boutte did.

ROSTER CONTEXT

The single most efficient move of the week: satiro beat out at least one other bidder and still paid the FAAB floor. satiro is also winless (0-2), but this is the kind of value process that adds up over a season.

Jer13

ADD Chase McLaughlin (K — TB) → DROP Cameron Dicker (K — LAC) — $1

Winning bid, uncontested — already the minimum, no overpay possible

FANTASY IMPACT

A kicker swap for a better Week 3 matchup — the lowest-stakes move of the cycle by design.

ROSTER CONTEXT

Jer13 sits at 1-1; this is pure matchup streaming at the league's most volatile, lowest-impact position, and the $1 price tag is exactly right for it.
